

5-25-2018

2018 Commencement Remarks by the President

Philip L. Boroughs S.J.
College of the Holy Cross

Follow this and additional works at: https://crossworks.holycross.edu/commence_president

Part of the Arts and Humanities Commons, and the Higher Education Commons

Recommended Citation

Boroughs, Philip L. S.J., "2018 Commencement Remarks by the President" (2018). President's Remarks. 3.
https://crossworks.holycross.edu/commence_president/3

This Speech is brought to you for free and open access by the Commencement Speeches at CrossWorks. It has been accepted for inclusion in President's Remarks by an authorized administrator of CrossWorks.

Presidential Remarks

Friday, May 25, 2018

Rev. Philip L. Boroughs, S.J., president of the College

Members of the Class of 2018, four years ago when I formally welcomed you to the campus at your New Student Convocation, I commented that during their college years at the University of Paris, roommates St. Ignatius of Loyola, St. Francis Xavier and St. Peter Favre, with several others, founded the Society of Jesus. 450 years after their collegiate experience, their legacy continues to have global impact, and through the mission of the College of the Holy Cross has directly touched each of us. I then ended my remarks that afternoon by saying:

As I look at you, the Holy Cross class of 2018, I wonder what experiences you will share, what ideas will capture your minds, what deep desires will move your hearts, what human needs will inspire your generosity, and what life-transforming projects you will devise to serve the common good? These undergraduate years have the power to set the direction for your entire life. Enjoy them.

Now, 4 years later, I hope you have enjoyed your time on Mount St. James. While I suspect that for many of you it is still too early to discern with precision your life's direction, I hope you are taking the next steps in your life's journey with confidence. Clearly the intellectual life you pursued here has given you a wide range of new questions and interests which are now leading many of you to graduate studies.

For those of you about to enter the workforce, hopefully the education you have received, the values we have emphasized and the profession you are choosing will engage some of the real needs facing the human family and will do so in ways which can reach across some of the differences which currently divide our country.

And as people of Faith and responsible citizens, the commitment to service which was such an important part of your Holy Cross experience is motivating many of you to find new ways of responding to our world's needs through groups such as the Jesuit Volunteer Corps, Teach for America, the Peace Corps and City Year.

For all the members of the Class of 2018, I hope that your immersion experiences, study abroad, Maymester trips, alternate Spring Break and other international and domestic cross-cultural experiences have stirred in you a life-long desire to learn more about different cultures, ways of living, political and social needs, and religious differences and similarities. If the College has been at least moderately successful in our attempts to create an inclusive and welcoming community here on Mount St. James, then we can expect that in the years ahead you will become increasingly sensitive, understanding and open to those who see the world with a distinctive lens or are differently gifted, and that you will work for social justice when their rights are denied.

Finally, in all the experiences where you have had to learn truths the hard way, have been challenged and struggled, have failed and rebounded, or have had to wait as the slow process of inspiration and insight unfolded, I hope you have been graced with patience, humility, and compassion, characteristics so badly needed in contemporary society. I hope, too, that the College's commitment to spiritual growth, religious development, and our human need for greater silence, prayer and thoughtful decision-making, will continue to mark your lives.

For those of you still discerning your next steps, be open to new experiences and don't be afraid to take some risks. Your first job doesn't have to be your life's career, but can simply be your best attempt to get your foot in a door and build experiences and a resume on which to base further decisions. I don't know any successful professionals, myself included, who haven't had to sort through periods of uncertainty more than once in our careers. These experiences, too, have a lot to teach us about creativity and resiliency.

Graduates, having just received your diplomas, your four years as students at the College now have come to a close. I want you to know that all of us who have committed ourselves to your education and formation have come to see ourselves and our world with new insight because of what you have given to us. We are proud of your accomplishments, in awe of your talent and generosity, and graced in your friendship.

To your parents and families, and to our alums and donors who have made this educational experience possible for you, we will be forever grateful. And, as you now enter the renowned community of alumni who so enthusiastically support the College and each other, we look forward to sharing with you the work of promoting and advancing this educational community in the years ahead.

Finally, for all who have prepared this ceremony, and for our speakers and honorary degree recipients whom we are about to recognize, we are truly blessed. Thank you.