Unseen Power

Bryon Williams
College of the Holy Cross

Follow this and additional works at: https://crossworks.holycross.edu/griot

Part of the African American Studies Commons, Literature in English, North America, Ethnic and Cultural Minority Commons, and the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://crossworks.holycross.edu/griot/vol2/iss1/4

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by CrossWorks. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Griot by an authorized editor of CrossWorks.
People have tried to tell me the strength that is at hand.
But like so many I was in a rush to be called a man.

Since the beginning you stepped in and was always watching
Some will refer to it as an anointing, but I call it a covering.

When gangs came along you stepped between us.
The drugs tried to get me, but you showed how clean I was.

When times got rough, my body and spirit you would patch.
When the world hit me hard, before I could fall, my body you would catch.

Often I do wrong and I know I let you down.
For you deserve all I have because you were there when no one else was around.

You’re my light, my fire, and strength from within.
With you in my life there’s no challenge I can’t win.

You are always by my side even when I sway.
The one thing I ask is that you don’t take your joy away.

The joy of a different lifestyle.