Seniors

by Herbert G. Keene, Jr.
It was a warm day in the late summer, and Linden Lane resembled Broadway at Forty-second Street. Parents waved good-bye to sons who refused, for the sake of appearance, to be affectionate, and the sons, carrying tennis rackets which seemed standard equipment, climbed the heights of O’Kane and Wheeler. Roommates were met, scrutinized, and befriended, and together we sat in the undersized cells and listened to the fantastic “sales-talk” of the upper-classmen who offered the “best possible deal” on everything from the “official school blazer” to a third-hand Ford with a garage that even “Jerry” couldn’t find. The only relief from these head-hunters was provided by the battery of aptitude exams which challenged our dexterity with words and pried into the corners of our minds with such questions as: “When was the last time you committed suicide?” ROTC candidates submitted to physicals which were thorough enough to be embarrassing, and as a consolation were given ill-fitting uniforms. Through all these torments rang the constant encouragement of the Purple Key whose members were determined to make us feel at home if they had to shoot us to do it. By the end of the first week, and without excessive bloodshed, we were beginning to feel at home, and were ready for the classes which then began.

To say we were shocked by the amount of work expected of us would fail to do justice to the skillful planning of the faculty. We asked our Senior Brothers how much work could be done, and they filled us in on the niceties of Holy Cross. “Don’t study for Father so-and-so. He can be snowed!”, or “Get his tests from last year. He never changes them.” Bolstered by such encouragement, we started through the Fall, and by the time the snow came we had learned the knack of keeping our heads above water. Besides the studies, there were many other things of interest. Football almost every Saturday at Fitton Field, and although the team had its hands full getting off the field alive, still there was the excitement and the spirit; the spirit that upset B.U. in the game of the year. Up on the practice field things were looking up for the future. Dick Surrette and Jack Ringel were a most potent combination in the freshman backfield, and along with Paul Toland, Dick Eaton, and a line featuring the terrible Turrins, Tony Graziano and Jack Kern, were rolling up an unbeaten season. Basketball followed football, and before Tommy Heinsohn took to the floor, a freshman team of Houston, Hughes, Ryan, Andreoli, and Foley cleaned up on New England competition.

With the beginning of the second semester, Joe Mullaney, our honorary president, turned the government of the class over to Frank O’Regan. O’Regan wasn’t the only man coming to a new job, for at about that time, Father Donovan posted his last notice, saying that “a dreadful hoax has been perpetrated” and turned the Discipline office over to “Midnight Mac.” Father Abbott became Assistant Dean, and, for a while, if you got there when he was on duty, you could have two o’clock for the asking.

Mike O’Loughlin was the first one to feel Spring, and with his resultant prose and poetry, smashed the upper-class sanction of the Purple. Jack Sheehy admitted that the East wasn’t so bad after all, and became the class leader in the debating circuit. Father Ahearn bid farewell to Winter with the Spring ode, and now it was only a matter of time until the summer vacation would begin. To make the waiting a bit easier, President O’Regan organized the class picnic at Carbunkle Park, and with the help of Senior brother Bob Henzler’s motorcade a wonderful day was spent. Traug Lawler turned politician to win the Sophomore class presidency, and then came exams. Father Casey’s religion exam was the talk of the campus, and the math finals proved completely destructive. But by the time the marks came out, we were resting on a sandy stretch of beach with our toes in the cool water, and it didn’t really make much difference.

Sophomore year gave us a change of address as we moved into the spacious Alumni Hall. Some of our members found themselves on first Wheeler, and still a smaller group on the top of Beaver. Contrary to a cruel rumor, Saturday classes were still fashionable, and in accordance with an even crueler rumor, the time-honored tradition of frequent morning Mass had become a tradition of daily morning Mass. Father Abbott was burning with zeal in his second year as assistant dean of men, and all too few of us escaped the telltale illumination of his three-cell Eveready. There was the month of "The great car crackdown" and for a while you could pick up a sophomore's auto for a song. The teachers struggled among themselves for the honor of being the "toughest markers" and in their blind pursuit of fame, put no limits on the amount of work expected. Traug Lawler tried to add a touch of gladness with the Sophomore picnic; a picnic which produced the beer with the five-inch head. Then came the great flood which removed the Southbridge street bridge, and marooned a hundred Crusaders at Marymount. The hardships were many, but by Thanksgiving, we had re-learned the tricks of the trade, and were bearing up nicely. Meanwhile, the weight of fifty-eight was making itself felt around the hill. Surette and Ringel were in the starting backfield, and until a fellow named Brown ran over them, it looked as if they were going to take us South for New Year's Day. Joe Hughes was warming-up in the fieldhouse for a starting space with the varsity, and sophomores added the depth to the "Heinsohn five." Dan Fitzgerald, Roy Amy and Clay Whiting were leading reporters for the Crusader, and Bill Kennedy and Mike O'Loughlin could be read monthly in the Purple. Jack Sheehy was the hottest man on the BJF squad, and John Davis accompanied some thirty sophomores in the Glee Club. All campus activities were benefiting from the organizational talents that seemed to be the hallmark of the class of '58.

With the coming of second semester, the social season heightened. There was the Military Ball which, as usual, was the best ever, and the Junior Prom weekend with the wonderful Prom Prelude. Spring came, and the sophomores joined with the upper-classmen and a few ambitious freshmen in terrorizing the neighborhood women's colleges. Then came finals, and although the year had been the hardest we would face, nevertheless we managed to cram, and somehow to get by. Now the bloody years were over, and as we sped down Linden Lane we felt assured that the architecture of the campus wouldn't be as hard to come back to as it had been at the beginning of Sophomore year.

Fall again! That second summer seemed to fly. But now Latin was gone, and for many, Greek went with it. Also gone were Saturday classes, and one of the older faculty members remarked that with them went the future of Western Civilization. Suitcases became the rage at fifth period on Friday, and with so many Crusaders out of town for the weekends, Anna Maria had to offer ice-cream with their customary ginger-ale in order to keep the attendance up at their Friday night socials. But all was not pink lights and angel hair. There was a great deal of work awaiting the class, and Jim O'Connor, the new president, was just the man to get it done. The Fall was spent in organizing, with Pete Strain planning the Junior Prom, and Sheehy & Kennedy Productions drawing up plans for the NFCCS convention. Mike O'Loughlin and Stu Maher continued to pound Purple poetry, and Jim Milliken and Jim Suelzer provided prose and verse. Tom Hungerford starred with Ken Happe in the dramatic club presentations, and Bob Roche and Art McGuinness soloed with the glee club. With everyone in New England calling us the best class to hit a college since the stars fell on West Point, Bill Merritt set out to save the area from the blight of overstatement. Bill zoomed home as one of the nation's top runners, breaking all local records for the Four-forty on the way. Football was a bit disappointing, especially the humiliation which was televised by courtesy of Penn State. But Paul Toland caught the season with a diving catch at the Fenway, and can a season be called poor that ends up with a victory over the Eagles, or should we say the painted Eagles?

Winter was merry everywhere, except in the Worcester Auditorium where a lack of height brought on by the loss of Pete Houston was giving the Crusaders a poor season. Joe Hughes and Art Andreoli were terrific, but the team losses were proving the rule that you have to get the ball to score with it. Mid-years were dispatched with the minimum of brain fever, and since Easter was as late as the moon ever allows, we began grinding out the days, one by one, until the holidays. After the holidays, things moved quickly. And then came the Prom. It would take many histories to contain all the memories of the weekend. But certainly Pete Strain, Mark Gallagher, and the Prom Staff must be remembered as well as the Prom Belle, and the music of Eliot Lawrence. By the time the weekend was finished we couldn't have cared less about school work. The final month was spent stretched on the grass exchanging stories and memories, and planning revenge on Cato, and the Green Hornet.

Senior year, we knew, was different from the others. Now it was our show; the college was to a large extent in our hands. And in spite of the many inconveniences, we knew we wanted to do a good job; wanted to live up to the reputation which was ours.

Hugh Crean took over the job of president as the final year began. Mike Taylor organized the "Senior Brother" program while Tom McGrath took over as honorary president of the Freshman class. Every Senior took charge of a Freshman, and remembered how much a senior brother had been able to help him only a few short years before. Once the freshmen were made to feel at home, we shifted our attention to the work of the year. After three years of work, Mike O'Loughlin had his own magazine, and his '58 version was the best Purple any of us had ever seen. Dan Fitzgerald sat in judgement in the Hungerford office, and gradually lifted the school paper from its former affliction of ennui. Tom Hungerford took the Dramatic society, and with characteristic ambition tackled the difficult, "Witness for the Prosecution." Bill Kennedy became editor of the Yearbook and began trying to squeeze the most out of Farley Moran's money. This same Mr. Moran also took control of WCHC, and put the station on the air on an all-day basis.

In sports, Bill Merritt continued to amaze the world of track and field. Dick Suttle took over as Captain of the Crusader eleven and led the team to a successful season. Toland, Kern, and the Turrins were strong all season, while Jack Ringel's late season surge helped upset Syracuse. Joe Hughes was spectacular in bringing the basketball team back to winning ways, helped by Art Andreoli and Tom Ryan. Emmet Curren led Lacrosse to school recognition as a major sport, and fifty-eighters dominated swimming, yachting, tennis, golf and a nationally recognized baseball team.

Wherever you looked, things were better. Everything from marks to spirit was at a new height, largely due to the efforts of the class.

And then came that day in June; the day when the last big function, Jack Swartz's Senior Ball was over. Once again Linden Lane looked like Broadway and Forty-second, but this was not the same group of boys who had come four short years before. This was now a group of men, ready to carry the ability and the ideals which four years at Holy Cross had managed to give to them out into the world.

And that is why the history of this class will not be written for many years to come. As Lawyers, Doctors, Business men, Publishers, Writers, Military men—in every field imaginable, the men of this class have something important to contribute. Only when they have made their contribution, will the work of this class be finished. And only by examining the changes of the fibre of the world they are entering will one be able to find the material to write the History of the Class of 1958.
A senior's day begins with the abrupt rattle of an alarm clock. He rolls lazily to his side, reaches out an uncertain hand, and begrudgingly admits the dawn of another day.

at Holy Cross

At five minutes of seven, the cold December air succeeds in waking him as he walks down the hill toward the chapel... where he receives the Body of Christ.

After Mass, he discusses the day's schedule with a classmate over a Kimball breakfast.

Most of the morning is spent in class . . .

The afternoon brings the rallies, meetings, and the many activities so much a part of the Cross. He keynotes a rally before an important basketball game.

... with a mid-day break at Kimball.
In the late afternoon a senior returns to his room to begin the long, seemingly endless hours of study . . .

... broken only by the more than occasional bull-sessions . . .

... a weary yawn . . .

... a late hour snack . . .

... and the day is ended.
